A MODERN Remorse

The home is a magnificent ode to the original 1930s brick Tudor, was painstakingly renovated over four years, with a keen eye toward preserving the essence of its heritage. Thanks to the expert guidance of KGA Studio Architects senior partner Paul Mahony, who had cultivated a close relationship with the homeowners for over a decade, a comprehensive blueprint emerged that balanced practical considerations with unwavering respect for the structure's emotional resonance.

The project also entailed addressing past renovation mishaps that had compromised the flow and aesthetic integrity of the home. The architect deftly navigated this delicate dance between honoring the home's past and embracing its future, resulting in a remarkable journey that culminated in the perfect synthesis of history and modernity.

The ornate furnishings and fittings are nothing short of mesmerizing, with most of them being custom-made to create a one-of-a-kind aesthetic. But it's not just the craftsmanship that sets this space apart - it's the textures that truly take it to the next level. Every surface is refined, soft, and natural, with a striking quality that captivates the senses. From the plush velvet chairs to the sleek marble countertops, every element has been thoughtfully selected to create a space that's as visually stunning as it is comfortable to live in. This is a place where beauty is not just skin-deep; it's a part of every detail, every corner, and every texture that surrounds you.

LIVING OUTDOORS

Landscape architecture firm Design Workshop collaborated on a visionary plan to replace the former rose garden with a dazzling boxwood maze, which was brought to life by the skilled artisans at Designscapes Colorado. The homeowners elected to keep two existing fountains, including one that can be seen in all its grandeur. Situated on a sprawling lot of just under three acres, the property boasts a variety of outdoor gathering areas that beckon guests to linger and bask in the natural beauty that surrounds them.
